This makes the Binance Affiliate Program the most suitable and rewarding for affiliates who have an active trading community.

Note that while the incentives are attractive, Binance can be rather stringent in its affiliate selection process. On top of being screened by their team, promoters need to have at least 5,000 followers on social media or 500 active traders in their community before they're considered eligible for the affiliates program. While the commission rates may seem attractive, KuCoin is rather strict in terms of its quarterly assessments. As a crypto platform that specializes in on-ramping and off-ramping, Changelly is a niche exchange that offers affiliates a choice when it comes to its Changelly Affiliate Program. Compared to conventional crypto affiliate programs, Changelly Earn offers affiliates the flexibility to choose between two earning programs. The first one is called RevShare, and it's targeted toward social media influencers, community managers and bloggers. RevShare lets you earn up to 50% of purchase and exchange transactions.

The second option is the CPI, CPA and Hybrid earning program, which is targeted more toward data-centric marketers and SEO specialists. As cost-per-action incentives are separately discussed with Changelly before an agreement is made, we're assuming this crypto affiliate program stands to benefit more experienced affiliates, who already have a skill set that can maximize their revenue by incentivizing certain actions.

Last but not least, the Bitcoin IRA™ Affiliate Program wraps up our comparison of the top crypto affiliate programs. It distinguishes itself from the rest of the entries above by being an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) crypto platform that aims to help Americans retire with a balanced crypto retirement portfolio. This means users can only buy and sell crypto using their IRA funds. While this limits the platform to Americans, it's a novel niche that many content creators can tap into if they have majority American audiences.

Instead of a percentage fee, Bitcoin IRA rewards affiliates with a $50 kickback per successful invitee. This deal is made all the better with additional performance-related cash bonuses that are doled out over the course of your success as a Bitcoin IRA affiliate. Similar to CEX.IO, Bitcoin IRA also offers a 30-day cookies referral period.
